He produced evidence, that the tunes played during the mutiny, were "God save the King," "Rule Britannia, rule the sea," &c,—that the oath administered to the Delegates was, that they had no communication with Jacobins or traitors; that if the French fleet was at sea, they would have gone in pursuit of, and fought them; and that he (PARKER) offered to lead the fleet into the Texel, after the Dutch fashion —— The details of the trial are lengthy.—After Parker had produced his evidence, the Court was cleared; and at 4 o'clock, the following sentence was pronounced —

"The Court Martial do adjudge, that the whole of the charges against RICHARD PARKER, for mutiny, &c. have been fully proved; in consequence of which, and in consideration of the enormity of crime so proved, as unprecedented in their nature, as wicked in their tendency, and as dangerous to the naval strength as to the peace and safety of the country, the court adjudges the said Richard Parker to suffer death, and to be hanged by the neck, on board any one of his Majesty's ships, and at such place as the Lords of the Admiralty may think proper to appoint, and he is hereby adjudged to suffer death accordingly."

Parker received the sentence, with a degree of fortitude and unconcern which astonished all present, and which excited the admiration of every one.

"I have no cause for apprehension (he observed) being convinced I have either from the clemency of a good conscience — God, who knows the hearts of all men, will, I hope, receive me. I hope that my death alone will atone for the country. And that those brave men who have acted with me will receive a general pardon. I am satisfied they will all return to their duty with alacrity."

President. "It is in the breast of the court to order you for execution immediately, but we think better to give you time to repent your crime."

Parker. "I return you my thanks for the indulgence."

President. "The death warrant of Parker was signed yesterday, for execution this day week. At the same time an order was sent down for the execution of Johnson, a marine officer, for mutiny on board the Pompee [illegible] Nore, [illegible] Brest, [illegible] married, and were for taking the ships into Brest—but it was discovered in time; the mutineers arrested, and the above two ringleaders condemned.

Johnson. "I die like Parker in the brave cause, and in behalf of the seamen — I die with courage, but at the same time deserve the anger of Providence, I read three psalms, and desire to be repeated some passages of the Bible; humbly asked pardon of God for my sins; and gave him the signal for the execution, by dropping a handkerchief. His body was delivered to his wife, who had it interred. Search is diligently making for the remaining accomplices; but it is thought there will be few executed, as the whole account of the mutiny

Parker was a Scotchman, a native of Perth.

JUNE 4. The fpirit of revolt and combination is an inſtant diſplaying itſelf in ſome part of our ſquadrons. Ships have quitted the fleet of Admiral Bridport, and have been brought by the inſurgent ſailors into the ports of Plymouth and Portſmouth.

They write from Portſmouth that the Mars, of 74 guns, from Ld. Bridport's fleet, has been brought into that port by the crew in a ſtate of mutiny. We are aſſured, that the Marlborough and Queen Charlotte, have alſo come into Plymouth from the ſame cauſe. The crews of the Mars and Marlborough conducted with the greateſt violence at the time of the mutiny.

HAGUE, JUNE 30.

Preparations for an expedition againſt England, are ſtill continued with the greateſt activity at the Texel.

FROM GENOA.

Letters from Genoa aſſure us that a great part of the inhabitants of that Republic have it in contemplation to aſk for the re union of their country with France. If this could be effected, the ſtates of Genoa would be [illegible] of the fineſt departments of France.

Bourdeaux. We have reports of Admiral Jarvis's bombarding Cadiz.

They appear at their wits end. Directory, and to be aware of the [illegible] power. For ſeveral days [illegible] by the [illegible] and [illegible] — [illegible] the moſt [illegible].*

All the noiſe which has been effected about a renewal of hoſtilities, is reduced to the following circumſtance. In conſequence of the preliminary articles of Peace, the French army has evacuated ſeveral parts of Italy; and the Auſtrians entered them. But the inhabitants of ſome places, a little vexed with doubt at the viſit of theſe laſt, took arms, and diſcharged ſome muſketry to oppoſe their entrance. Their revolt was of ſhort duration.

BUONAPARTE declares, that when these preliminaries are complied with, he will then treat upon other points, and determine the new frontiers of the Republic.

Council of 500, July 1.

BARBE MARBOIS made a report upon the resolution relative to sending new agents of the Directory to St. Domingo. He proved that it was impossible to save this important colony without a very active government, but he did not dissemble that its fate depended entirely upon the choice which the Directory should make. If they are good men, it may again flourish: It is lost forever, if they are bad. He employed himself afterwards in tracing to them, in some degree, the rout they will have to pursue to succeed in this desperate undertaking. They should seek, said he, rather the general interest than local prejudices: To ally mildness to firmness:

THE Secretaries of said Board are directed to meet at their office, that the books of society are mended, and that the government is the parental. To gain the hearts of the Spaniards who are Frenchmen in name only: To encourage OUR ALLIES of the United States, against [illegible] property has been [illegible] the victims: "It is not a little [illegible], which, being [illegible] by no law, is a real piracy."

It is said that the Directory has fixed on Gen. Hedouville for [illegible] in St. Domingo.—The Gen. is just arrived in Paris; he was, as is well known, one of Hoche's companions in the pacification of La Vendee. He is said to be intelligent, firm and conciliating, and well calculated to restore tranquility in our colonies.

PEACE.

Negotiations with the Emperor continue. The new preliminaries were signed at Basle, between the Republic and Empire.

Lord Malmsbury, [illegible]

[illegible] gation. They have fixed their next conference. Petitions for peace appear to prevail; and Hope rests with safety on the [illegible] ther.

From the Philadelphia Gazette.

July 6. Of the news only announced [illegible] hostilities were recommenced; many journals [illegible] to-day. It is difficult to receive this news, and the least reflection is sufficient to reject it entirely. How can we think the Emperor has begun to fight again, after having aided in the subjugation of the Venetians, and after having himself apprized our powers around him, that nothing is to be heard of them to the detriment of the dismemberment of the unfortunate Prince Emperor himself of hearts, as will not the Grand Turk, the King of Prussia, and the Emperor of Russia, in their turn, have a right to aid the French republic in pursuing his estates?

July 7. The news of the renewal of hostilities with the [illegible] delegated with peculiar confidence, he contends, ought to be exercised [illegible] paper has been very low; [illegible] day it had no fixed value; it was offered at all prices, without finding any for bills on London, yet the Directory have [illegible] arch[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [ for its cowardice in ſuffering the partitions of Poland; in that partition was written the downfal of the coalition.

July 9. The following is the amount of all the reports reſpecting the recommencement of hoſtilities in Italy.

In conſequence of the preliminaries of peace, the French army had evacuated ſeveral parts of Italy, to which the Auſtriens returned: But the inhabitants of ſeveral places doubtleſs but little flattered by the viſit of the latter, took arms and fired upon the ſoldiers to prevent their entry. Their reſiſtance however, did not continue long. Thus in ſpite of all newſmongers and ſtockjobbers, war will not break out again.
